Certified-nurse midwives are licensed, independent healthcare providers trained to provide comprehensive and compassionate care to women through every stage of their life.

Midwives are dedicated to promoting and supporting a woman’s natural physiology and offer a holistic approach to her health care.

During pregnancy, midwives provide education and empower women to make decisions about the direction of their care. During labor and birth, midwives offer both physical and emotional support to women and their families.

They are skilled in managing common problems in pregnancy and birth, and work in partnership with their colleagues in obstetrics if complications arise. In the office setting, midwives also provide gynecologic care and family planning services.
Yale-New Haven Hospital (YNHH) is unique in that it is home to a large number of certified-nurse midwives. The Yale School of Nursing hosts one of the premier programs of nurse-midwifery training in the United States at YNHH.

Many of its outstanding graduates offer midwifery services throughout the community in YNHH affiliated OB/GYN and midwifery practices. To find a provider near you, visit ynhh.org
