George Cobb Found

Our Find of the Month for December is the kind I really enjoy because it combined the efforts of several committee members. All will share in the coveted award.

George Cobb had been listed for years with a San Francisco connection. Various people had tried for years to find something in San Francisco on him with no success. The big break in the case came when Pete Morris sent me a note that Cobb began playing professionally in Charles City, Iowa in 1888. Since I had never checked for Cobb in Iowa, I decided to run him through the 1880 Iowa census. I found a George W. Cobb, age 14, in Independence, Iowa, just a stones throw from Charles City. He was the right age and had the right middle initial.

I wrote the historical society in Independence and they sent me obituaries on every one of his family except George. I was somewhat encouraged by the fact that one of his nephews played semi-pro ball and was nicknamed "Ty." The obituary of Cobb's father mentioned that George was living in Pomona, California.

I asked Joe Simenic about Cobb and Joe found him playing in the California League. Unfortunately, I could not find Cobb in the 1900 California census. I checked the California death index and found a George W. Cobb who was the right age who died in Los Angeles County in 1926. I then wrote Rick Johnson and asked him to check the Pomona papers in hopes of finding an obituary of Cobb that might mention baseball, since at this point we had no assurance that the Cobb we found was the ballplayer.

Rick found the obituary, which may feature the largest headline ever announcing a player's death. The obituary appeared on the front page of the Pomona Bulletin and ran for two pages under the one-inch high banner, "GEORGE W.

COBB IS CALLED BY DEATH." It also contained a picture of Cobb. The obituary details his baseball career, which began as a player at the University of Iowa. It even mentions his stint with the 1892 Baltimore Orioles. (It neglects to mention his 10-37 W-L record.) The reason that he was so renowned in Pomona was that he was the head of the Los Angeles County Fair for many years, but it certainly made it easy to verify that he was the ballplayer. Great work by all involved!

Turk Burke

Another case that took a group effort to solve was that of the player that we had erroneously listed as Walter R. Burke. Tom Shea had written me several years ago that Walter Burke was not the 1887 Detroit player. I had pulled an obituary of Walter at that time and it neither confirmed nor denied that Walter was the ballplayer in question.

Once again, Pete Morris started the ball rolling on this one when he found a note indicating that Burke was born in Cincinnati and grew up in Atchison, Kansas. I checked the 1900 Atchison census and found a William R. Burke, born in Ohio, who was the right age to be the ballplayer. Unfortunately, that was not his listed occupation. Again, I enlisted the help of Joe Simenic. Joe found that Burke was always listed as "Turk" Burke or W. R. Burke. Promising, but not definite.

Then Mike Welsh broke the case. Mike made a trip to Atchison and found an 1890 listing in the city directory for Turk Burke, occupation ballplayer, and he was listed at the same address as William R. Burke was for the next several years. Mike was then able to locate Burke's death in Atchison in 1939. Another fine example of committee teamwork!
Last of the Gashouse Gang?

In every obituary I have seen of Burgess Whitehead, he is referred to as "the last surviving member of the Gashouse Gang." Naturally, anytime I see a statement like this, I have to check it out. Clifford Rankin "Pat" Crawford, reserve first sacker for that team, lives in Morehead City, North Carolina. I noticed that USA Today Baseball Weekly later printed a retraction. Did anyone write them and let them know of the error?

Errata

Sometimes the eyes and the fingers down talk to one another. In last month's report, the death of Cecil Glenford Boland should have been Cecil Glenford Bolton. Obviously, I was looking at the Edward Boland line above it. Keep me honest.

New Members

Please welcome Joe Wayman, P.O. Box 4203, Downey, California 90241 to the committee. Joe's code number will be W4.

Birthday List

There are several nonagenarians celebrating birthdays in January.

Jan 6      Robert Barnes     92
Jan 12     Joe Hauser       95
Jan 14     Russell Scarritt 91
Jan 16     George Fisher    95
Jan 27     Milt Gaston      98
Jan 28     Pat Crawford     92
Jan 29     Ray Hayworth     90

With a Name Like That, We Can't Find Him?

Our last Mystery of the Month for 1993 is a man with probably the most unusual name among our missing players. (Huyler Westervelt fans may dispute this.) Elwood Otto Wagenerst was born June 3, 1863 in Kutztown, Pennsylvania. We list his death as February 12, 1946 with the place of death unknown. I have never been able to find anything on this player, either in Pennsylvania or anywhere else. Does anyone know anything about him? I would also like to know the source for his birth and death dates.
