What do the Battle of Gallipoli (1915), the Treaty of Sevres (1920), and the Treaty of Lausanne (1923), have to do with Turkey, the Movement for an Islamic State in Greater Syria/the Levant (ISIS/L), and the “I Belong” campaign just launched by the United Nations Human Rights?

Are you teaching with the headlines?

Would you like to have conversations with educators in the U.S. and Turkey, teaching about global issues? Would you like to learn from scholars in the field about what is happening on the ground in Turkey, Egypt, Northern Iraq and Syria?

We provide instructional materials that connect the past to the present, which put the Middle East in Global perspective. The content includes primary sources, images and relates to the Common Core standard for Grades 5-12: Compare and contrast treatments of the same topic in several primary and secondary sources (CCSS.ELA-Literacy.RH.9-10.9). This unit sets the groundwork for related discussions:

kb.osu.edu/dspace/handle/1811/59179

Follow our blog for ongoing analysis of Middle East events:

mesc.osu.edu/breaking-down-headlines

Our affiliated faculty can also visit your classroom through skype or Adobe Connect. Send a request to mesc@osu.edu

Join conversations hosted by scholars on these topics, with guest speakers living in the region. Sign up by sending a request to mesc@osu.edu

The Middle East Studies Center (MESC) is an area studies center of the Office of International Affairs. It was designated by US Department of Education as an Undergraduate Title VI National Resource Center (NRC) in 1988, 1991, 1994, 1997, 2000, 2003, 2005, and 2009 cycles, for a total of 28 years. This history of funding and the university’s land grant mission, mandate that we provide resources to students, local schools and community members, teachers, military and government personnel, the business community, media, and others. Tools such as simulcasting, course-sharing platforms and video-conferencing are helping us share LCTLs, area studies courses, and teaching materials with partner institutions and our constituencies, especially teachers. This strategy leverages and increases the global reach of our academic engagement program, rendering knowledge more accessible, and delivering content to more individuals.

Join our community of educators!
Follow us on Facebook, Twitter, or send us an email.

facebook.com/mesc.osu
mesc@osu.edu
@mesc_osu