Community engaged learning, teaching as performance, and more in Sta...

Creating an Intelligent Textbook

A textbook that "knows" the relationships among all its information guides students to learn in a way that's natural for them.

Connecting Students with Community

The Power of Performance

Teaching is performing. Here’s a conversation with Stanford lecturer Tom Freeman about enhancing your performance in your class.

A Worldwide Class for Worldwide Issue: Women's Health & Human Rights

Anne Firth Murray led a very popular MOOC on International Women's Health and Human Rights this year. Read how she did it and what she learned. Then sign up for the next offering of the MOOC now.

Teaching First-Year Students

Freshmen may think about learning differently--and have very different expectations about it--compared to you and your more advanced students. Two Stanford profs share tips on Prof. Cathy Heaney recently received the Roland Prize for her success in integrating community-engaged learning with her teaching and research.